

Copyright Guidelines

The Windham Public Library complies with federal copyright law (Title 17, U.S. Code). It is the intent of this law to protect the rights of copyright owners from unauthorized reproduction of their works. This includes works that have been fixed in any format, including print, audio, video, and computer file, whether or not they have been published.

However, the law also recognizes the public benefit of allowing citizens to do limited copying from copyrighted works for educational purposes. Limitations can be found in sections 107 through 118 of the Copyright Act. Within these sections fair use has been codified. Under the precepts of fair use, library patrons may copy or print parts of copyrighted works for one-time, educational, non-profit activities. Copying that would replace or infringe upon commercial sale of a copyrighted work (such as copying a work in its entirety, copying something for repeated use, or making numerous copies of the same item) is forbidden. In such cases, library patrons should seek permission from the copyright owner before proceeding.

The distinction between fair use and infringement may be unclear and not easily defined. There is no specific number of words, lines, or notes that may safely be taken without permission. Acknowledging the source of the copyrighted material does not substitute for obtaining permission. The safest course is always to get permission from the copyright owner before using copyrighted material. When permission cannot be obtained, use of the copyrighted material should be avoided unless fair use clearly applies. If there is any doubt, it is advisable to consult an attorney.
